The traditional university model is in crisis. The cost of tuition is rising faster than inflation, student debt is at an all-time high, and graduates are increasingly finding themselves underemployed or unemployed.

There are a number of factors that have contributed to the crisis of the traditional university. One factor is the increasing cost of higher education. The cost of tuition has been rising steadily for decades, outpacing inflation. This has made it increasingly difficult for students to afford a college education.

Another factor that has contributed to the crisis of the traditional university is the changing nature of the job market. In the past, a college degree was a guarantee of a good job. However, this is no longer the case. Today, many college graduates are finding themselves underemployed or unemployed.

The traditional university model is no longer meeting the needs of students. Students need a university that is affordable, flexible, and relevant to the job market. The Third University is a new kind of university that is designed to meet these needs.

Another example of a forerunner of the Third University is the New School for Social Research. The New School is a private university in New York City that is known for its innovative approach to higher education. The New School offers a variety of undergraduate and graduate degrees in the social sciences, humanities, and fine arts.

These are just two examples of the many universities that are pioneering new models of higher education. These universities are demonstrating that the Third University is possible.

Chapter 4: Building the Third University

The Third University is not just a utopian dream. It is a university that is being built today. There are a number of things that can be done to build the Third University.

One thing that can be done to build the Third University is to create new universities that are based on the principles of openness, flexibility, and collaboration. These new universities can be created by educators, students, and community groups.

Another thing that can be done to build the Third University is to transform existing universities. Existing universities can be transformed by making them more open, flexible, and collaborative.

Finally, the Third University can be built by supporting the work of forerunner universities. Forerunner universities are universities that are already pioneering new models of higher education. These universities need our support to continue their work.
